

Online Safety Tips for Caregivers

The online world offers many opportunities for adults and children to learn, and has also dramatically changed how we communicate. Unfortunately, cyber-space is also a place where children and adults can be victimized. Cyber-bullying, predatory behavior, and loss of privacy are just some of the risks. In order to effectively protect children, foster parents need to be familiar with online communication, and take the necessary steps to promote internet safety for the children and youth in their care.

Recent research shows that almost 20% of kids talk to strangers on social media every day. Social media is also widely used by children of elementary school age—children who cannot yet understand the risks. Educating the children in your care, setting boundaries, and supervising online activity are some of the best ways to reduce risks.

Following are some tips that may be helpful for you and the children and youth in your care.

Educate the Children

- Talk about the risks, such as what can happen when a child's identity, location, or other personal information gets into the wrong hands.

- Kids in care are at higher risk for online (and other) bullying. Discuss what bullying looks like, what to do if the child or someone they know is bullied online, and how important it is to communicate with parents if it's happening.
- Educate the child in your care about grooming behaviors. Predators don't begin conversations with explicit sexual requests. They begin by acting like a friend and validating the child's feelings.

Children in care may be at greater risk since they may be feeling afraid, isolated, or lonely.

- Warn the child in your care that gifts, pressure to do things, requests for pictures, and other seemingly innocent actions by an online acquaintance could also be grooming.

- It's a good idea to discuss respectful and healthy online behavior with everyone in your family.
- Help the child in your care distinguish between quality sites and social media messaging, and those that distort and seek to exploit people.

Set Boundaries

Many families have established house rules for a multitude of behaviors and expectations; yet sometimes they neglect to address the importance of developing clear and consistent rules around being online.

Continued on page 2

6682 West Greenfield, Suite 310
Milwaukee, WI 53214
800-762-8063
info@coalitionforcofyf.org

© 2011;
updated 2019

In partnership with:

You might consider having a posting a written Family Online Agreement in a place where everyone can see it. That agreement should:

- Establish clear boundaries about prohibiting the posting or sharing of personal identifying information online, such as names, pictures, telephone numbers, addresses, or passwords/logins. For example, have the child avoid a username like “Jane.Doe2011.”
- List specific sites kids should not be visiting, as well as firm rules about the consequences of visiting those sites.
- Identify clear expectations about the use of video game systems or other household devices that have online capabilities.
- Specify time frames when kids can be online. For example, sleep is known to be disrupted when kids bring their cellphones or tablets to bed. Have a designated spot for devices to be kept when not in use.
- Communicate a firm message that kids should never meet someone they've met online without talking to an adult first.
- Be shared with other members of the child’s care team (birth family, social worker, school staff, respite providers, etc.).

Keep the Lines of Communication Open

- Teach the child in your care that, if they get in a situation that feels uncomfortable, they should and can always come to you, and that they won't get in trouble if they do.
- Avoid grounding kids from screen time for violations of the Family Online Agreement. Doing so may make it more likely that the child will hesitate to come to you if they are experiencing a problem online.
- Discuss with the child and the child’s care team how you, as the foster parent, will be monitoring the child’s online activity. Help the child understand that family safety means all family members need to act responsibly.

- Discuss with the children in your care any uncomfortable online experiences you’ve had, and how you resolved them and learned from them.

Educate Yourself and Supervise

- Become familiar with the latest online platforms and apps, even if it’s simply to know which ones are most frequently used. Whether the children in your home have devices or are using yours, understand that devices are easily accessible to them.
- Ask the children in your care to share their favorite apps, or to teach you what they already know. You’re likely to learn something new, and it helps build a child’s self-esteem to teach you something.
- Utilize monitoring software and be diligent about using it. Inform the child’s care team so that privacy issues can be handled with care.

Explore Together

Learn from one another by utilizing online content and social media as teaching tools and educational resources. While it is true that the internet can be dangerous, it is also an invaluable resource for opportunities to learn and grow together.

Resources on page 3

6682 West Greenfield, Suite 310
Milwaukee, WI 53214
800-762-8063
info@coalitionforcof.org

© 2011;
updated 2019

In partnership with:

Resources

- A Parent's Guide to Internet Safety (an FBI resource)
- The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children
- NetSmartz has resources for parents and guardians, educators, law enforcement, teens, and kids
- Online Teen Safety Guide
- Phone Monitoring Software
  - <https://www.webwatcher.com/>
  - <https://www.mobicip.com/>
- Filters Software: Parents can elect to purchase filter software that will block pornography, hate sites, questionable chat rooms, as well as other dangers online. The following are a couple of suggestions:
  - <http://www.netnanny.com/>
  - <http://www.cybersitter.com/>

6682 West Greenfield, Suite 310
Milwaukee, WI 53214
800-762-8063
info@coalitionforcyf.org

© 2011;
updated 2019

In partnership with:

